OLIVIA RODRIGO IS SET TO HEADLINE GLASTONBURY 2025

The 22-year-old pop star will take to the main stage at the annual Worthy Farm festival on Sunday, 29 June, marking a major milestone in her career.

Meanwhile, Charli XCX – who recently won five BRIT Awards – will perform on the second day of the festival, topping the bill on the second stage on Saturday, 28 June.

Other exciting acts joining the lineup include Alanis Morissette, Noah Kahan, Gracie Abrams, Lola Young, and US rap star Doechi, all making their debuts at the prestigious event.

Additionally, festival-goers can look forward to comeback performances from Wolf Alice, Wet Leg, Fatboy Slim, Loyle Carner, and Scissor Sisters.

Sharing the exciting news, Glastonbury organisers posted on Instagram:

"Here is the first Glastonbury Festival 2025 lineup poster. Many more acts and attractions still to be announced."

Olivia Rodrigo previously made a memorable appearance at the festival in 2022, where she was joined by Lily Allen for a powerful rendition of 'F You' on the Other Stage.

In a significant change for the festival, it has been confirmed that once this year's event concludes, Glastonbury will take a break in 2026 to allow the land "a rest."

NEW TREND SEES TIKTOK POKE FUN AT MILLENNIAL BURGER CHAINS

The latest TikTok trend is roasting 'rustic' millennial burger chains, highlighting their quirks in hilarious detail.

Think wooden plates, bare bulbs, metal barstools, and overpriced fries served separately.

This trend follows Gen Z's previous joke about cave divers squeezing into tiny spaces.

Now, attention has turned to these trendy burger spots found in gentrified urban areas.

Mashable credits TikToker Kyle Gordon's parody song, inspired by Fun.'s 'We Are Young,' for sparking the trend.

The song's nostalgic, overly dramatic vibe became the perfect soundtrack for mocking millennial burger joints.

TikTokers are poking fun at brioche buns, endless topping options, craft beer chalkboards, and phrases like 'kick-ass' on menus.

They also joke about these restaurants being founded by 'two guys with a dream' who claim to 'do things a little differently.'

Beyond the humour, the trend highlights the growing generational divide, as Gen Z and millennials reflect on their distinct cultural influences.

CALVIN HARRIS IS SET TO RELEASE A COUNTRY-INSPIRED TRACK

Calvin Harris has shared a 30-second clip of himself singing “Smoke the Pain Away.”

In the video, Harris plays an acoustic guitar and sings, occasionally shown in soft focus.

His long hair and stripped-down performance add to the song’s raw, foot-stomping feel.

“Too late I’ve been up for days,” he sings. “I can’t even see straight, no I can’t smoke the pain away.” In the caption, Harris teases, “it’s coming.”

This marks Harris’ first release since “Free,” his 2024 track with Ellie Goulding, following the release of his compilation album, 96 Months.

The song already has support from his wife, BBC Radio 1 presenter Vick Hope, who commented, “Those vocals...YEEEESSSSS!!!” with a fire emoji.

While Harris has no scheduled performances for 2025, the release signals a fresh direction for the dance music icon.

He follows in the footsteps of artists like Avicii, who famously blended country and electronic sounds with “Wake Me Up” in 2013.

A COMEDY CLUB HAS BANNED GUESTS THAT HAVE BOTOX

London's Top Secret Comedy Club has banned guests with Botox, citing its impact on the venue's atmosphere.

The Covent Garden club, known for hosting comedians like Jack Whitehall and Amy Schumer, claims that frozen facial expressions make it harder for performers to engage with the crowd.

"I've had numerous complaints from comedians who struggle to gauge audience reactions," says owner Mark Rothman.

Calling the ban a "last resort," the club hopes it will help restore lively interactions.

"We want to bring genuine facial expressions back—for the benefit of both comedians and audiences," Rothman adds.

TAYLOR SWIFT FANS SCAMMED IN MAJOR ERAS TOUR TICKET HACK

Two hackers have been arrested in New York for stealing over 900 Taylor Swift tour tickets and profiting $600,000 (£465,700).

The arrests took place on February 27, following an investigation by Queens County prosecutors.

The hackers, who worked for a third-party StubHub contractor in Jamaica, allegedly exploited their access to intercept and resell ticket URLs for major tours.

These included Taylor Swift's 'Eras Tour,' as well as concerts for Adele and Ed Sheeran.

The scheme ran between June 2022 and July 2023, leading to charges of grand larceny, computer tampering, conspiracy, and tampering.

NEW STUDY SUGGEST GEN Z ARE LESS INTERESTED IN LIVE MUSIC

A new study shows that Gen Z is attending fewer festivals in 2025, with 19% reducing their attendance or avoiding them entirely.

Interest in live music has dropped, with only 39% of those surveyed expressing interest in festivals—down from 46% in 2019.

Just 29% of Gen Z actively seek out live music events this year.

Rising costs are a major factor, with ticket prices soaring over the past five years. Attending a top-tier concert now costs at least £120 ($160) before fees.

Additionally, as Gen Z enters adulthood, financial responsibilities like careers and home ownership may take priority over festival spending.

Interestingly, 31% of Gen Z reported attending live events with their parents in the past year.

Streaming may also be impacting festival attendance, offering a cheaper and more convenient way to experience live music.

CHAPPELL ROAN TRIES OUT A NEW STYLE AT FIRST FASHION SHOW

Chappell Roan is making her Fashion Week debut!

The Grammy winner, 27, attended the Rabanne fall 2025 runway show as part of Paris Fashion Week.

Roan stepped out in a slightly different take on her signature over-the-top look, wearing a metallic Rabanne dress with an open back.

The singer added sparkling drop earrings to match and sported a dark auburn hair colour, a departure from her usual bright red.

In a video shared to Vogue's Instagram, Roan excitedly shares, "I'm at my first fashion show, Rabanne. And I'm wearing Rabanne. So pretty."

She added, "I don't really look like me right now, but it's kind of awesome. I'm so excited!"

EXPERTS ISSUE WARNING OVER 'FLOODLIGHTING' DATING TREND

Dating experts are sounding the alarm on 'floodlighting,' a trend where people share deeply personal details too quickly in a relationship, creating an intense spotlight of vulnerability.

Dating expert Jessica Alderson explains that while opening up is important, 'floodlighting' can lead to a false sense of intimacy before truly getting to know someone.

This can leave individuals vulnerable to manipulation or create an imbalanced dynamic where one person becomes an emotional caretaker.

Alderson suggests that 'floodlighting' often stems from insecurity, acting as a way to preempt rejection by forcing early emotional investment.

However, this rapid closeness may not be sustainable, potentially leading to relationship struggles down the line.

Experts advise pacing emotional disclosures to build genuine, lasting connections.

LADY GAGA SAYS 'I WANT TO BE REMEMBERED AS A REAL ARTIST...'

Lady Gaga has poured "so much" of herself into her new album 'Mayhem,' set for release on March 7, 2025.

The 38-year-old pop star said that she has reconnected with her artistry in a major way, embracing her identity as a musician, producer, and songwriter.

She emphasised that while some may associate her with extravagant outfits like the meat dress, she wants to be remembered as a "real artist" who deeply cares about her craft.

Gaga also explained that 'Mayhem' defies categorization, unlike her past albums, each of which had a distinct sound or vibe.

From 'ARTPOP' to 'Born This Way,' she has always shaped her music with a defined aesthetic.

However, with 'Mayhem,' she intentionally avoided fitting into a specific genre, allowing the music to stand on its own.

HOT #CATDAD CONTENT IS TAKING OVER TIKTOK AND DATING

TikTok's "hot cat dads" are winning hearts, proving that men with cats aren't just accepted—they're desired.

Creators like Merayad Ali, Nathan Kehn, and Cat Daddy Dan are reshaping dating norms.

With studies showing a 14% increase in right swipes for profiles featuring cats.

Experts say the trend challenges outdated gender stereotypes, making cat-loving men more attractive than ever.

Kehn, who co-founded the Tabby dating app and starred in Cat Daddies, believes cat culture is having its moment.

With swooning comments and marriage proposals flooding TikTok, one thing is clear—cat dads are in demand.

SABRINA CARPENTER NARROWLY AVOIDED A MID-SHOW MISHAP

Sabrina Carpenter narrowly avoided a mid-show mishap during a recent stop on her Short n' Sweet Tour, all thanks to the quick thinking of one of her dancers.

While performing "Busy Woman" in Dublin earlier this week, Carpenter experienced a small slip in choreography that led her to call for assistance.

In a fan-uploaded TikTok video, Carpenter can be seen kicking her stilettoed foot out before placing it above the bent knee of one of her dancers.

However, she didn't quite center herself, causing the heel and outer edge of her foot to hang precariously off her colleague's leg.

As her leg started to slip, Carpenter leaned back, shouting, "Help me!" into the microphone.

In a split second, the dancer reached out to steady her, grabbing her at the hips. Carpenter laughed into the mic as the dancer spun her around to keep the choreography going.

Afterward, she pointed to the dancer and affectionately added, "I love you!" as part of the lyrics.

Fan Katie, who posted the video, captured the moment with the caption, "She's just a clumsy queen like me and you 🙄❤️."

Another fan on X commented, "ik it's kinda the bare minimum but im glad her dancers genuinely have her back," with many agreeing that her on-stage team felt like "her family."

NEW STUDY FINDS THE SAUNA IS REPLACING THE CLUB

A new study reveals that Gen-Z is increasingly turning to communal saunas as an alternative to traditional nights out.

The study shows that young people are moving away from nightclubs and embracing saunas as a space for socializing, wellness, and relaxation.

This shift in social habits mirrors the Finnish tradition, where saunas have long been a communal, everyday activity.

Unlike the often elitist perception of saunas in other countries, Finland's public saunas are an integral part of daily life.

As alcohol consumption declines and young people seek healthier ways to unwind, the sauna trend is expected to continue growing in popularity.

DOECHII RATES DESSERT AND THE BAKER RESPONDS' PERSONALLY'

After Doechii gave a less-than-stellar rating to a dessert in a social media video, the chef behind the treat decided to send her a fresh batch of goodies to try!

The 26-year-old Grammy winner is in France for Paris Fashion Week, balancing high-fashion shows with sightseeing at iconic spots like the Louvre.

Amidst her busy schedule, Doechii took a moment to review some desserts from her hotel (which she chose not to name) on Instagram Stories.

Recently, Doechii shared a clip of herself trying an orange pastry, but she wasn't overly impressed.

"Okay. Here's the thing, I get it. I get it, but it doesn't mean that's, it's for me," she explained after taking a bite.

"It's an acquired taste," she added before giving it a "four" out of 10.

The next day, Doechii returned to her hotel room to discover a spread of fresh desserts, including a chocolate microphone.

She excitedly showed the treats on Instagram, revealing that the hotel had responded to her review.

"They gave me a note that said, 'Hey miss girl, we brought you some more desserts for you to try. These are personally from our baker,'" she shared.

"And so we're going to try these again later on."

Grateful for the thoughtful gesture, she added, "Thank you so much to my hotel that I will not be disclosing."

Later, when she finally tasted the new treats, including one that resembled a lemon-lime hybrid, Doechii's reaction was a stark contrast to her previous review.

After taking a bite, she exclaimed, "I get it. I get it. I get it... I think I like it." She then rated the citrus-flavored dessert an "eight out of 10," a major improvement from her earlier four.

COFFEE SHOPS ARE 'QUIETLY' REBRANDING AMERICANOS

Ordering coffee has become more complicated with endless options for milks, syrups, and flavors.

But now, there's a new twist: the "Americano" is being replaced with the "Canadiano" in some cafes.

The Americano, a diluted espresso drink introduced by U.S. soldiers in WWII, is being rebranded as a political statement.

The name "Canadiano" originated from Kicking Horse Coffee in British Columbia, which started calling it that in 2007 as a subtle nod to Canadian pride.

The idea gained traction after U.S. President Donald Trump's tariffs on Canadian goods in the late 2010s, with Canadian cafes like Toronto's Cafe Belém adopting the new name to stand in solidarity.

Food writer Stephanie Gravales sees the rebranding as a "quiet rebellion," linking it to historical examples of food renaming during political tensions.

The Canadiano serves as a playful yet pointed form of national branding, a small act of resistance that speaks to the broader themes of identity and culture.

TATE MCRAE SUFFERED INJURIES WHILE FILMING NEW MUSIC VIDEO

Tate McRae endured a series of painful injuries while filming the music video for her hit "Revolving Door."

Released last month, the video features McRae in a stunning white outfit and towering heels, showcasing impressive dance moves in a circular room with multiple doors.

In a recent interview, McRae shared the challenges of dancing in heels for the first time.

"I'm really bad at walking in heels, so this shoot was brutal," she admitted. "It was an eleven-hour day, and our feet were taped up, covered in blisters and bruises. We were destroyed by the end."

In addition to the foot injuries, McRae also suffered from whiplash.

"I was convinced I had a concussion. My brain was just moving," she said. "It was a whole new level of soreness after that shoot."

McRae is currently on her Miss Possessive Tour, with her next stop in Mexico City on March 18.

If you're planning your dream wedding, the last thing you want is a food poisoning disaster.

But that's exactly what happened to a couple, Shawn and Azalea, who recently shared their horrific wedding day experience on TikTok.

The couple had a beautiful ceremony at a park, but things quickly took a turn when their food vendor arrived late and seemed "unprofessional and unfriendly."

Shawn and Azalea had booked the vendor to serve tacos, but the vendor's food handling left a lot to be desired.

There were reports of unsafe practices like cross-contaminating raw meat with other foods, which raised serious red flags.

The couple didn't realize how bad things were until after the reception, when they and several guests began feeling sick.

Shawn and Azalea's daughter was in and out of the bathroom all night, and the couple even heard their guests' unfortunate bathroom experiences at the campsite where they were staying.

In the end, the couple's special day was ruined, with some friends even needing to visit the ER.

When Azalea contacted the vendor for accountability, she was blocked. Let's just hope their honeymoon goes a little smoother.

JUSTIN BIEBER APPEARS TO BE SHRINKING HIS INNER CIRCLE

For a while, Justin Bieber seemed to be trimming his entourage to a small group of trusted individuals.

Recently, reports have circulated that his estate manager, Mateo Caldas, had left the pop star's team.

However, a source close to Bieber clarified that Caldas didn't quit; rather, he was fired by the "Stay" singer five years ago.

With this, Mateo has become the latest person the 31-year-old has cut ties with.

STUDY FINDS MOST PARENTS TRY LOOKING 'PERFECT' ONLINE

A new study reveals that more than 60% of parents have been carefully curating their social media to present a "perfect" image.

However, in 2025, 62% plan to embrace more authentic, unfiltered moments.

Over half (53%) admit they feel it's impossible to meet the "perfect" standards seen online.

Nearly half (48%) of parents are ready to portray themselves more realistically, embracing the chaos of daily life.

The study, which focused on candid parenting moments, found that parents experience an average of three funny or strange moments with their kids every day.

Common moments include kids having "conversations" with stuffed animals or dancing around the room.

Additionally, 94% of parents face chaos daily, including kids hiding things or escaping their sight.

Mealtime often adds to the mayhem, with parents witnessing everything from garlic powder being poured on heads to kids falling asleep in their food.

Despite the daily challenges, 82% of parents find humour in the imperfections, with many also navigating daily "food fights" over new foods.

Most parents focus on their child's happiness at the dinner table, even if they don't win every battle.

BRUNO MARS & SEXYY RED TAKE THEIR SONG ON A WILD OUTING

Bruno Mars and Sexyy Red brought their steamy track Fat, Juicy & Wet to life at a strip club!

The 26-year-old rapper shared a video on her official X account, showing her and the Uptown Funk singer having a wild time.

In the clip, both stars are holding bundles of cash and tossing it at the dancers while Mars shows off some moves.

Sexyy Red captioned the video with two laughing emojis and a fire emoji, writing, "I had @BrunoMars outside and turnt yal."

Mars playfully responded in the comments, "Wait.. when did this happen?"

JELLY ROLL REVEALS HIS DREAM SUPER BOWL HALFTIME LINEUP

Jelly Roll has a bold vision for the Super Bowl halftime show.

During a guest appearance on the Bussin' with the Boys podcast with his friend and fellow musician Ernest, the "Need a Favour" singer shared his dream for a country music-themed Super Bowl halftime performance.

"My dream would be a Nashville country music Super Bowl," Jelly Roll, 40, said. "It's not just about one artist performing, though.

Picture it: it cuts to Garth [Brooks] on one stage singing 'Friends in Low Places,' then it moves to Reba [McEntire], then Lainey [Wilson], then me, and then Morgan [Wallen]."

Jelly explained that the entire production would last around "18 minutes," slightly longer than most traditional halftime shows.
